A Note from Natalie

After 17 years of talking about and advocating for Providence House, it's sometimes easy to forget that there are still many people in the community who don't know what we do, or who may have misconceptions about the work that goes on at Providence House.

I still hear people say, "You're the place that rocks babies." Yes, we do. But we also do so much more. Not only do we protect nearly 400 children every year, we also help them reach their developmental, social emotional, and educational milestones. And we help their parents. By building nurturing parenting skills and addressing family crises, children can reunite with their parents in a safe, stable home. Did you know that 99% of our children safely return home following our services? That's our record for the past 10 years and counting! And a testament to the commitment of our families to become stronger, safer, and self-sufficient.

It's easy to judge these families. We know that some think that these are "bad parents" who have made "bad choices." So often, this is not the case. These are moms, like Johanna on the cover of this newsletter, who had no support system and turned to Providence House. Or dads, like Arthur, who live paycheck to paycheck only to become homeless with his son when he couldn't afford rent, utilities, and food after he lost his job. Providence House becomes the family, friend, and neighbor these parents trust to keep their children safe while we help them rebuild their family.

But if there is one thing I have learned in doing our work, it's that there can never be enough awareness, outreach, or education about the challenges facing parents and children in our community and how our services help them.

Awareness is key to combatting misconceptions in the community and to making sure that the families that need our services are aware of them and how to access them.

This past spring, we worked with TWIST Creative, a local advertising agency, that generously donated their time and talent to build a community awareness campaign for Providence House. TWIST fearlessly took on the painful and difficult subject of child abuse prevention and family crisis for our campaign; shining a bright, bold, brave light across our city about the love, devotion, and dedication of our children, families, and community champions. You can see these stories on our website. You can also be a part of our campaign and advocacy: visit a Phoenix coffee shop and text a gift for our coffee sleeve promotion or purchase a t-shirt and tote bag promoting our powerful messages of hope for children and families on our website at provhouse.org/store.

I hope that you will read the stories on our website and help us spread the message of hope that Providence House brings to children and families in our community. Please take the time learn more about the real issues facing our families and children by visiting the video gallery on our website to watch my TEDxCLE talk "Bad Moms or Bad Circumstances" and our "Changing the Story" video about the lifelong impact of crisis on children. 20 minutes of your time with these videos will leave you shocked, sad, and I hope, ready for action and positive change!

Thank you for being a part of the most important work that we can do for a safer, stronger community – protecting our children and building stronger families. You help us bring hope and healing to our community's most desperate parents; striving to protect their most precious treasures – their children – from hunger, homelessness, and harm while they bravely and vulnerably ask for our help to rebuild their lives.
